

People

Medicine for the

and the

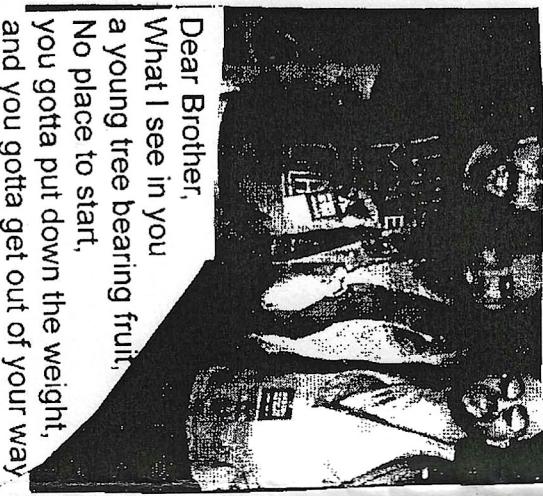

Nahko

I began to listen to Nahko and the medicine for the people for about five years now. I was introduced to him by my brother, who has accompanied me at all 6 concerts.

When I began to listen to him, his lyrics inspired a new love for nature. His music changed my perspective on how I see life.

Deep breathes for a young man leamin', walk with the cedars humin', Talk a walk with the cedars humin',

OoOoOh Father Mountain

Dear Brother,
What I see in you
a young tree bearing fruit, No place to start,
you gotta put down the weight, and you gotta get out of your way

In the moon of the gated new eyes to see

So I reach for my head, I understand nothing, I reach for a constellation that seems to be growing stronger than me Oh how could I have been so thoughtless with my love.

His music has done much for my soul, but none other than reviving it from a broken relationship. He himself has gone through relationships and it influences his lyrics.

So lost in thought.
So things I remember pretty things of them is your pretty One of them it would face, Another's the things say.

Oh, Susanna I don't cry for you You're the best adventure yet but I'm only passing through

So she used her head and instead put the baby in the bed of a woman she never met.
Many years ago and she wonders where he roams.

I will go to the volcano, melt my heart in Mauna Keas snow
The less I speak the more I know, the faster I move, the slower I go

Yukon. Nothing here but emptiness though somehow I feel most comforted with no one, with no heat no telling where we will wake up next.

Instead of going to college, Nahko went to Alaska and Hawaii. He learned more about himself in the few years spent there than he has in his whole life.

He is a Native American, whose history runs deep. He was adopted by a white family where he learned piano.